A Brief History of Oklahoma

The Prehistoric Age

Substantial evidence exists to demonstrate the first people were in Oklahoma approximately 11,000 years ago and more than 550 generations of Native Americans have lived here. More than 10,000 prehistoric sites are recorded for the state, and they are estimated to represent about 10 percent of the actual number, according to archaeologist Don G. Wyckoff. Some of these sites pertain to the lives of Oklahoma's original settlers—the Wichita and Caddo, and perhaps such relative latecomers as the Kiowa Apache, Osage, Kiowa, and Comanche. All of these sites comprise an invaluable resource for learning about Oklahoma's remarkable and diverse Native American heritage.

Given the distribution and ages of studies sites, Oklahoma was widely inhabited during prehistory. Among the earliest people were those who came and resided here at the end of the last Ice Age, some 11,500 years ago. These earliest cultures are: Clovis, 11,500 to 10,900 years ago; Folsom, 10,600 to 10,200 years ago; and Plainview, 10,000 to 9,500 years ago. Named after the Southern Plains locations where their distinctive artifacts were first discovered, these cultures are the material goods of Native American bands that occupied adjacent parts of Oklahoma, Texas, and New Mexico in different ways. All are so far back in prehistory that they cannot be linked directly to any historically known tribes. Oklahoma archaeologists have discovered good examples of places once occupied by these earliest people. At the Domebo Site in Caddo County, three Clovis-type spear points were found among the ribs and vertebrae of a Colombian mammoth. In Harper County, a major Folsom-age bison kill recently was uncovered near Fort Supply. Called the Cooper site, this location resulted from Folsom hunters trapping and spearing bison herds in a deep gully on three separate occasions. Perhaps a thousand years later, Native American hunters using the Plainview-style spear point killed a small herd at what is now called the Parry Ranch site in Jackson County.

Approximately 8,000 years ago, Oklahoma was undergoing drastic environmental changes, and warm, dry weather was becoming prevalent. Bison herds became fewer, and people increasingly turned to hunting smaller game and gathering plants. Band territories became smaller as groups developed seasonal hunting-gathering patterns in favored localities. Among Oklahoma's notable sites that bear witness to this lifeway are the 5,500-year-old Gore Pit site in Comanche County, the equally old Scott site in LeFlore County, and the 4,500-year-old Lawrence site in Nowata County. These sites have yielded a diverse array of chipped or ground stone tools along with remains of roasting ovens made from stones. Currently, professional and avocational archaeologists are documenting a previously unknown hunting-gathering people who lived here 5,000 years ago. Called the Calf Creek culture, these people left important camps in Murray, Garvin, Caddo, Kay, Tulsa, Muskogee, and Haskell counties.

About 2,500 years ago, Oklahoma's climate began to become more like that of today. As plant and animal communities like those in the 1800s emerged, Oklahoma's Native Americans began to become farmers and important traders. The bow and arrow was in use 2,500 years ago, and 1,800-to-2,000-year-old clues to pottery making and farming are known from small villages studied in Delaware, Kay, Osage, and Ottawa counties. About 1,000 years ago, Oklahoma had major populations of farming villagers in the Panhandle, along the Washita River in Garvin and Caddo counties, along the Arkansas and Grand rivers in Wagoner, Muskogee, Sequoyah, and LeFlore counties, and along Little River and its tributaries in McCurtain County. Some of these villagers constructed ceremonial centers that vied for power with other southeastern chiefdoms. Between 1,000 and 800 years ago, the Spiro site in LeFlore County was one of the most important political-religious centers known north of the Valley of Mexico. By 500 years ago, all of Oklahoma's village societies were undergoing rapid change, in part due to climatic fluctuations, and out of this turmoil came the Wichita and Caddo people who were observed by the first Spanish and French explorers of the area.

The Historic Age

Whites first came to Oklahoma as explorers. Europeans discovered Oklahoma and its people in 1541, when Francisco Vasquez de Coronado led a gold expedition through western Oklahoma. Members of the expedition hunted buffalo and visited the camps of the Plains Apaches, the first Indian tribe the Spaniards met in Oklahoma. Coronado left a small group of missionaries who wished to work among the tribes teaching Christianity, putting Oklahoma under the Spanish flag.

Another Spanish explorer, Hernando de Soto, introduced some of the eastern tribes to firearms, tools and other European ways, although he only traveled as far as Little Rock, Arkansas. De Soto encountered the Chickasaws, Choctaws, Creeks, and other tribes then living in the southeastern United States, and who were later removed to Oklahoma.

About 1700, two tribes from the North, the Comanches and Kiowas, migrated to Oklahoma. They settled in the Wichita Mountains where they adopted the horse; hunted buffalo; and raided Spanish settlements in Texas, northern Mexico, and New Mexico. Spaniards from New Mexico often came to Oklahoma to trade with the Comanches and Kiowas, and although they did not establish settlements in Oklahoma, they claimed Oklahoma as a part of their territory in North America.

Next came the French from the North and the East. Robert Cavelier, Sieur de la Salle led an expedition down the Mississippi River to the Gulf of Mexico. The territory on the west bank of the Mississippi River he named Louisiana. Fur traders and other French expeditions moved inland from New Orleans, which the French founded in 1718. The first Frenchman to actually visit Oklahoma was Juchereau de St. Denis. He explored land drained by the Red River, searching for places to establish settlements for trading with the tribes. In 1718 Bernard de la Harpe led an expedition to the Canadian River in eastern Oklahoma, that was inhabited by the Wichitas and Caddoes. The French established towns and lived with the tribal people. Oklahoma was under the French flag until the 1760s.

The largest conflicts to take place during the 1700s were the battles between the Spanish and the Comanches and Kiowas in the West. The French, who wished to trade for the buffalo hides of the Comanches and Kiowas, sent members of the eastern tribes to trade and avoided conflict with them. In 1762 French and Spanish leaders signed a treaty. It required France to return Louisiana (which included the area of Oklahoma) to Spain. However, in 1800 a treaty between the French and Spanish governments required the return of Louisiana, including Oklahoma, to France. In 1803 ownership of Louisiana changed once again, when the U. S. government purchased it for $15 million. Oklahoma was now under the American flag.

Soon after 1803, explorers, soldiers, and private citizens entered Oklahoma. Explorers came to study the land and resources and to map Oklahoma. Soldiers came to build forts and to guard the Oklahoma frontier. Spain still owned Texas and New Mexico, and were not very friendly neighbors at this time. Citizens included settlers, who came to establish farms and towns, and trappers and traders, who came to hunt fur-bearing animals and to supply tribes with goods. These pioneers found several tribes living here: Osages in northeastern Oklahoma's tall grass prairies; Quapaws in eastern Oklahoma, ravaged by measles, smallpox and other European diseases; the Wichitas and Caddoes in the southwest; and the Plains Apaches and Comanches living in western Oklahoma. The Osages, Comanches, and Kiowas fiercely resisted American pioneers. The western boundary of the territory was not established until 1806 and was the result of an expedition led by Captain Richard Sparks, the first American official to reach Oklahoma. His expedition was turned back by the Spanish. Another expedition that same year, led by Captain Zebulon M. Pike explored the Arkansas River and reached Oklahoma's eastern border on New Year's Day in 1807. Other explorers who visited the state: George C. Sibley accompanied by Osage scouts, explored northern Oklahoma along the Arkansas River and its tributaries; Stephen H. Long in 1817 established Fort Smith, Arkansas, between the Poteau and Arkansas rivers; and Thomas Nuttall, a scientist, came to Oklahoma in 1819 to study the geology, plants, and animals along the Grand, Verdigris, Cimarron, Poteau, and Arkansas rivers. Nuttall also wrote Journal of Travels in the Arkansas Territory, one of the earliest scientific books about Oklahoma.

Through these early expeditions, maps and reports prepared by the explorers assisted American officials to make agreements about the southern and western boundaries separating the territory of the United States and Spain. Portions of this boundary line—the Red River and the 100th Meridian—later became the southern and western boundaries of Oklahoma.

Soldiers were assigned to explore Oklahoma and were expected to protect the area against foreign invasion. Fort Smith, as mentioned, was established in 1817; Fort Gibson in northeastern Oklahoma and Fort Towson in the southeast were erected in 1824; and by 1861, several other posts were constructed, including Camp Arbuckle, Camp Holmes, and Camp Washita and Fort Coffee in 1834, and Fort Cobb in 1859. Soldiers surveyed and mapped the territory, built roads, and were some of the first law enforcement officers, farmers, and builders in the territory. Some leading men of the nation served as officers at the Oklahoma forts, including Zachary Taylor, a general in the Mexican War and later president of the United States; Jefferson Davis, later United States secretary of war and president of the Confederate States of America; and Robert E. Lee, later commander in chief of Confederate armies in the Civil War.

Territorial Days

Settlement of the territory by American pioneers ended, temporarily, when the United States government changed the use of Oklahoma: it became the area to which all Indian tribes from east of the Mississippi River would be removed. It would be called Indian Territory until 1906. The federal government resettled many tribes to Oklahoma from the eastern U.S., Kansas and Texas, Arizona, California, Idaho, and Washington. The tribes were relocated to remove them from American expansion. Tribes living in the territory south of the Ohio River were among the first to be colonized in Oklahoma. These included the Cherokees, Choctaws, Creeks, Seminoles, and Chickasaws who came from Georgia, Florida, Alabama, and Mississippi. These tribes were moving to an area already inhabited by the Wichita, Caddo, Kiowa, Plains Apache, Comanche, Osage, and Quapaw tribes.

Many tribes resisted removal, both those being relocated and those already inhabiting the territory. In 1830, under President Andrew Jackson, Congress passed the Indian Removal Act, which increased the federal government's power with respect to removal of the tribes. Jackson appointed a three-man group called the Stokes Commission to prepare Oklahoma for the arrival of the Southern tribes.

The Stokes group assigned reservations for the Senecas, Quapaws, and others. The removal of the Southern tribes began in 1820 when the Choctaws signed a removal treaty. In 1826 the Lower Creek leaders signed a treaty, giving up a large portion of their eastern lands in return for a part of Indian Territory, and in 1832, the Upper Creeks made an agreement and moved onto the same reservation with the Lower Creeks. The Seminole tribe signed a treaty soon after requiring emigration to Indian Territory, as did the Chickasaw tribe.

Although the most famous removal was that of the Cherokee tribe, known as the "Trail of Tears," many other tribes, including the Choctaws, were removed by the same method. Most of the removals were completed in the 1830s. The tribal people, however, had been forced to walk all the way to Oklahoma across the South suffering cholera, smallpox, and measles epidemics, often in winter. Each tribe lost about one-fourth of its population on the westward march. Once established in the territory, the Choctaws, Cherokees, Creeks, Seminoles, and Chickasaws became known as the Five Civilized Tribes, due to their having adopted many European and American ways. They were well educated, and operated businesses, plantations, farms, and ranches. Many were slaveholders. The 1830 map of Indian Territory divided Oklahoma into three Indian nations: Cherokee, Creek, and Choctaw. In 1833 the Seminoles accepted a home with the Creeks, and in 1837, the Chickasaws agreed to settle among the Choctaws. Upon arrival in Oklahoma, these tribes also established towns, businesses, and schools including institutions of higher education for men and women years before similar institutions were established by white men in Oklahoma Territory. Very quickly the tribes became nations, establishing governments with written constitutions.

Already established in the western part of the territory were the Wichitas and Caddoes, basically agricultural tribes, and the Kiowas, Comanches, and Plains Apaches, primarily buffalo hunters who roamed the western half of Oklahoma, into Texas and New Mexico. Before the Civil War, several battles were fought in western Oklahoma between Americans and Plains tribes. The intrusion of Americans was depleting their hunting range and the size of herds, and these tribes actively resisted being assigned to a small area of the territory as the other tribes had done. The Civil War delayed the conquest of these tribes for nearly fifteen years.

By 1861 Indian Territory was prosperous. The tribes had tamed much of the wilderness and had established farms, plantations, schools, ranches, and businesses as mentioned. Their towns were, by now, busy commercial centers. Confederate leaders saw Indian Territory as a good supply of meat, horses, lead, salt, and grains. Since many tribes owned slaves, and their loss would be severe, the Five Civilized Tribes supported the Confederacy. Albert Pike was selected by Confederate officials as the commissioner in charge of the Indians of Oklahoma. He came to Indian Territory during the spring of 1861 and signed a Confederate treaty of alliance with each of the Five Civilized Tribes. Other tribes also sided with the Confederacy, while some remained neutral.

Many battles were fought in Oklahoma during the Civil War, and by the time the war ended in 1865, Oklahoma was a wasteland. Battles were fought between the soldiers of the Union and Confederate armies, but also between Confederate and neutral tribes. By 1863 the Union army controlled the northern half of Indian Territory. The Confederacy was led by Stand Watie, a Cherokee, and while he had many victories over Union troops, they had little effect on the outcome of the war. On April 9, 1865, Robert E. Lee surrendered to Ulysses S. Grant at Appomattox Courthouse in Virginia. Confederate commanders in the West then began to surrender. In Oklahoma, Watie and the Confederacy surrendered to Union officials at Doaksville in the Choctaw Nation on June 23, 1865.

During Reconstruction, the tribes were punished for helping the Confederacy; the most severe punishment was loss of tribal land. The Plains tribes were assigned to reservations. The Five Civilized Tribes lost much of their territory, and their governments were weakened. The year 1866 marked the beginning of the end for Indian Territory.

The war further reduced a population already diminished by removal, and smallpox and cholera epidemics infected Union and Confederate refugee camps. Both armies had burned most of the buildings owned by the tribes. The Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole nations were wastelands. The Choctaw and Chickasaw nations had escaped total destruction, but most of their livestock and food had been used to feed the Confederate army and refugees.

In the chaos, many outlaws passed through and hid in Indian Territory due to the lack of law enforcement. Belle Starr; the Younger brothers; the James brothers; and Ned Christie, the Cherokee bandit, were among the robbers and cattle rustlers living in Indian Territory after the war. Eventually the tribes asked the federal government for help and it cooperated by sending a large number of deputy U.S. marshals to Indian Territory. A further complication for the tribes was the arrival of more and more tribes from other parts of the country. In 1867 the Wyandots, Peorias, Miamis, and Ottawas began to arrive in Oklahoma. In 1873 the Modocs were removed from their original homeland and forced to Oklahoma, along with the Delawares and Shawnees. Additionally, many all-black towns were established in Oklahoma during this period due to segregation laws passed by the Five Civilized Tribes. Boley, Foreman, Red Bird, and Rentiesville are examples of all-black towns in Oklahoma.

By 1869 prosperity had returned to Oklahoma. Farming, ranching, mining, and railroad building helped the Indian nations. Before the railroads were opened in Oklahoma, the territory was a great highway for Texas cattle moving to railroad yards in Kansas. The first of these trails was the East Shawnee Trail. It crossed the Red River at Colbert's Ferry, to Baxter Springs, Kansas. The West Shawnee Trail branched toward Abilene (Kansas) at Boggy Depot. Abilene was the most important Kansas cow town. The Chisholm Trail was the greatest cattle highway in the West. It crossed central Indian Territory. Most of the Texas cattle marketed in the Kansas cow towns moved along the Chisholm Trail. The fourth cattle highway was the Dodge City, or Great Western Cattle Trail. After rail lines were built across Indian Territory, ranchmen used trains to ship their cattle to market.

Coal mining was another important industry in this period. Most of the early-day coal mining was in the Choctaw Nation near McAlester. Railroad companies operated the mines since coal was ideal for firing the locomotives' steam boilers. Miners and their families came to Oklahoma from Italy, Greece, Germany, Russia, Poland, and England.

Since many people who came to work in Indian Territory wished to live in the territory, tribes began selling permits, because only members of tribes could officially live in an Indian nation. By 1900 more permit holders were living in Indian Territory than tribal members. The demands of the permit holders led to the end of tribal governments.

In western Oklahoma, conditions were quite different than in the East. The federal government had taken the western half of Indian Territory from the Five Civilized Tribes and planned to carve this area into reservations for other tribes from other parts of the U. S. The Kaws, Osages, Sac and Fox, Potawatomis, Iowas, and Kickapoos came to Oklahoma after the war, along with Ponca, Otoe and Missouriia, Pawnee, Nez Perce, Tonkawa, Keechi, Anadarko, Ioni, and Waco people. The Comanches, Kiowas, Cheyennes, and Arapahos left their reservations to hunt buffalo and raid settlements. Between 1868 and 1874, there were many battles in western Oklahoma between Indian tribes and American soldiers. In one of the most famous of these battles, in late November 1868, Colonel George Custer led the Seventh Cavalry from Fort Supply, and at daybreak on November 27, Custer and his troops reached the Washita River. Scouts found a Cheyenne camp led by Chief Black Kettle. Custer ordered a surprise attack, and the Seventh Cavalry killed more than one hundred warriors, including Black Kettle. They took fifty women and children prisoners. Known as the "Battle of the Washita," it was the first of many campaigns against the Plains tribes. By 1874 the U.S. War Department decided to conquer these tribes. General Nelson Miles was placed in command of a large army. He defeated many warrior bands; others came in to the reservations and surrendered. Cheyenne and Arapaho bands that surrendered, did so at the Darlington Agency near El Reno; Kiowa and Comanche bands at Fort Sill in Lawton. The last warriors to be captured were the Quahada Comanches, led by Quanah Parker, on June 24, 1875. In 1894 Geronimo and his followers were captured and settled on the Comanche-Kiowa reservation.

Once the Plains tribes had been conquered, Congress began removing the obstacles to white settlement. The railroad companies also worked to open Oklahoma to settlement. The Katy, Frisco, Rock Island, and Santa Fe lines crossed Indian Territory. The railroad companies wanted more settlement to induce more freight, passengers, and profits. In addition to the railroad interests, a group of promoters called "Boomers" also worked to open Indian Territory to settlement. Boomers described Oklahoma's rich land and resources to large audiences in the East. They wrote newspaper articles describing Oklahoma as a "Garden of Eden." Leading Boomers were Charles C. Carpenter, Elias C. Boudinot, David L. Payne, and William L. Couch. They led settlers to the border of Indian Territory and set up camps, waiting for Oklahoma to be opened. Boomer raids and the related publicity put pressure on Congress, but before Indian Territory could be opened to homesteaders, tribal title to the land had to be removed.

The tribes held their land in common-ownership of the land was vested in the tribe and not in its individual members. During the 1880s, leaders in Congress decided the reservation system was a failure. They wished to change Indian culture, and Congress became convinced the only way to do this was to destroy tribal governments and tribal land ownership. They decided to break up the reservations, giving each tribal member an allotment of 160 acres. Government leaders believed making tribal members landowners would change their culture. In 1887 Congress passed the Dawes Allotment Act, which provided for dividing the reservations. Government agents were to assign each tribal member a 160-acre homestead—an allotment. Any land remaining was declared surplus, and this surplus land was to be opened to settlement by homesteaders. At this time the Dawes Act did not apply to the Five Civilized Tribes. By 1906 all of Oklahoma west of the territory of the Five Civilized Tribes had been opened to settlement. The Indian reservations had been changed to counties in the new Oklahoma Territory.

Homesteaders received farms in Oklahoma Territory by land runs and a lottery. The first portion of Indian Territory opened to settlement was the Unassigned Lands, a 2 million-acre tract in the center of Indian Territory. Only about 10,000 claims of 160 acres each remained, so in order to give all homeseekers an equal chance, officials decided to open the Unassigned Lands by a land run. On April 22, 1889, more than 50,000 homeseekers ran to stake their claim, and by evening, every homestead had been staked and town lots in Guthrie, Kingfisher, Oklahoma City, and Norman were claimed. Nearly 1,000 blacks made the Run of 1889. Most were from the South and many obtained homesteads. Langston was an all-black town established by these pioneers. Other land runs were held in 1891 in central Indian Territory; in 1892 in the Cheyenne and Arapaho reservations; and in 1893, the largest land run in history opened the Cherokee Outlet. The final land run was in 1895 when the Kickapoo reservation was opened for settlement.

For the next land opening, federal officials used the lottery. The surplus lands of the Kiowa, Comanche, Apache, Wichita, and Caddo reservations were opened. In 1906 the Osage reservation was allotted, and no surplus land for settlers existed. In addition, the Osage tribe held mineral rights in common, which later contributed to their being some of the wealthiest people on earth during the oil boom in the decades following statehood in 1907. After each reservation was allotted and settled, it was shifted from Indian Territory to Oklahoma Territory. Once a dispute with Texas about the ownership of Greer County was settled by the U.S. Supreme Court in 1906, which denied Texas's claim to the land, western Oklahoma had reached its present area and shape.

The newly arrived Oklahoma pioneers suffered great hardship. Money was scarce, and the environment was often cruel. Families lived in sod houses or dugouts due to shortages of timber. Much of Oklahoma was grassland, and wood—when it was available—was used for fuel. Otherwise, dried buffalo or cattle dung, known as “cowchips,” fueled the pioneers’ stoves.

During the pioneer period, most Oklahomans lived in the country on homesteads. However, several towns grew with the spread of the railroads. Guthrie, Oklahoma City, Norman, Enid, Woodward, El Reno, Lawton, and other towns developed into regional trade centers. Pioneer farmers marketed grain, cotton, and livestock. Guthrie was the territorial capital with a population of about 6,000 people in 1890, at that time the largest town in Oklahoma Territory.

Statehood

Oklahoma’s present state government had its beginning during the territorial period. The guide for forming a government for Oklahoma Territory was a law passed by Congress in 1890, the Oklahoma Organic Act. This law provided for a governor, a secretary, and a supreme court of three judges. The president of the United States appointed these officials. The act provided for a legislature and a congressional delegate to be elected by the voters of Oklahoma Territory.

Land Openings in Oklahoma, 1889 to 1906

The act also divided Oklahoma Territory into temporary counties and provided for county and town governments, and required the territorial capital be located at Guthrie. President Benjamin Harrison appointed George W. Steele of Indiana to be governor. Other territorial governors were Robert Martin (1891–92), Abraham J. Seay (1892–93), William C. Renfrow (1893–97), Cassius M. Barnes (1897–1901), William Miller Jenkins (1901), William C. Grimes (Acting, 10 days in 1901), Thompson B. Ferguson (1901–1906), and Frank Frantz (1906–07). All of these men were Republicans except Governor Renfrow, a Democrat appointed by President Grover Cleveland, also a Democrat.

During the territorial period, the Oklahoma Legislature established the foundation of future state government. Laws adopted by the territorial legislature created counties and courts, established the system of public schools, and began formation of the Oklahoma university and college system. The first territorial legislature created three institutions of higher learning: the University of Oklahoma at Norman, the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College at Stillwater, and the Oklahoma Normal School at Edmond. The normal school was to train teachers for the public schools of Oklahoma Territory.

White settlers were eager for statehood and held conventions each year. However, Congress did not act on Oklahoma statehood because most congressmen believed Oklahoma Territory should be joined with Indian Territory to form a single, larger state. Until this was done, Congress refused to take any final action on Oklahoma statehood. In 1893 Congress passed a law that extended the Dawes Allotment Act to the Five Civilized Tribes. By 1902 the Dawes

Land Openings in Oklahoma, 1889–1906

Commission had signed allotment agreements with all of the Five Civilized Tribes and began to assign allotment. There were no surplus lands for homesteaders.

The Curtis Act, passed by Congress in 1898, ended tribal rule. The Curtis Act substituted federal law for the laws of the Indian governments. It provided for surveying of townsites and it extended voting rights to more than half a million non-Indians—the permit holders. The Curtis Act abolished tribal courts and made Indian citizens subject to federal courts. With allotment completed and tribal governments abolished, statehood was possible. However, leaders of the Five Civilized Tribes opposed joining Oklahoma Territory. They wanted to form an all-Indian state named “Sequoyah.” Leaders of the Five Civilized Tribes met at Muskogee in 1905 where Creek Chief Pleasant Porter was elected president of the Sequoyah Convention. Alexander Posey, Creek poet and journalist, was elected secretary. The delegates wrote a constitution for the proposed state of Sequoyah. It was approved by the voters of Indian Territory, but Congress refused to consider it. They were preparing to join the Twin Territories to form the state of Oklahoma.

On June 16, 1906, Congress passed the Oklahoma Enabling Act. It permitted the people of Oklahoma Territory and Indian Territory to join and write a constitution. The Constitutional Convention was to meet in Guthrie, and was to consist of 112 delegates. Fifty-five delegates were to be elected from Oklahoma Territory, fifty-five from Indian Territory, and two delegates were to be elected from the Osage Nation. During the summer of 1906, voters in the Twin Territories elected convention delegates. Democratic delegates won one hundred of the convention seats, while Republicans won twelve. Democrat William H. Murray was elected president of the convention. His majority floor leader was Charles N. Haskell. The Republican leader in the convention was Henry Asp.

Delegates worked through the winter and drafted a constitution that created three departments for the new government. The executive branch consisted of a governor and eleven other executive officials. The legislative branch consisted of a house of representatives and a senate. The judicial branch was to be made up of a supreme court, district courts, county courts, and municipal courts. The constitution included provisions for initiative and referendum. Citizens could propose laws and could vote on laws submitted to them by the legislature. Social reforms included the eight-hour workday in mines and on public works. Child labor was forbidden. Prohibition, banning the sale of alcoholic beverages, was included.

An election in the Twin Territories was held on September 17, 1907, and the people approved the constitution and elected Charles N. Haskell as the state’s first governor, upon approval of the U.S. Congress. The constitution was sent to Washington, D.C., and after some study, Congress approved it on November 16, 1907, making Oklahoma the forty-sixth state.

Governors of the Territory and State of Oklahoma

Territorial Governors

George Washington Steele—Republican—served from 1890 to 1891.

Born December 13, 1839, in Fayette County, Indiana, the first territorial governor read law and was admitted to the bar after completing his studies at Ohio Wesleyan University. He left his law practice in Hartford City, Indiana, to volunteer in the Union Army where he served throughout the Civil War. Returning home, he entered business at Marion, Indiana, and as a Republican, served his locality in Congress from March 4, 1883, to March 3, 1889. His experience in Congress and as an army officer may have influenced President William Henry Harrison to select him as the initial governor of Oklahoma Territory. He took the oath of office in Guthrie on May 22, 1890, and found his hands full trying to bring order out of the chaotic legislative fights that he encountered. The school systems, plus three colleges, and the state library were all established in the course of his term. He resigned effective October 18, 1891, and returned to Indiana where he continued in public service until shortly before his death in Marion on July 12, 1922. Steele is buried in the I.O.O.F. Cemetery in Marion.

Robert Martin—Republican—served from 1891 to 1892. As the secretary of the territory, Martin served as acting governor from October 18, 1891, when George W. Steele left for Indiana, until February 2, 1892, when Governor Abraham J. Seay took office. Martin was born in Frankfort Springs, Pennsylvania, in 1833. After a law career in Ohio, Martin moved to Wichita, Kansas, and then to Harrison, Oklahoma Territory, in April 1889. He was involved in activity leading to adoption of the Organic Act, and, after moving to El Reno, he was named secretary of the territory. In later political life, he became mayor of Guthrie. He died there on March 2, 1897, and was buried in Summit View Cemetery just northeast of Guthrie.

Abraham Jefferson Seay—Republican—served from 1892 to 1893.

A native of Amherst County, Virginia, Seay was born on November 28, 1832. Three years later his family moved to Osage County, Missouri, where he eventually helped to educate himself while assisting in the care of his ten brothers and sisters. He read law and was admitted to the bar in 1861. He also served in the Civil War, attaining the rank of colonel in the Union Army at the end of the conflict. He returned to Missouri and alternated between private practice and serving as a district judge. Later, he became president of the First National Bank of Rolla, Missouri, an office he held until his death. In the course of that time he served as an associate justice of the Supreme Court of Oklahoma Territory, from which office he was advanced to the governorship. He took office on February 2, 1892, and served until May 7, 1893. After his death on December 22, 1915, he was buried at Kingfisher.

William Cary Renfrow—Democrat—served from 1893 to 1897. Born March 15, 1845, at Smithfield, North Carolina, Renfrow left the public schools at seventeen to serve in the Confederate Army until 1864. Returning from war he moved to Russellville, Arkansas, in 1865. He was a deputy county official until he entered the banking business in Norman, Oklahoma. First Ladies of Oklahoma

Oklahoma's first ladies represent a great range of personalities, interests, and backgrounds. They had one common goal—a desire to make a contribution to their state. These contributions varied greatly, especially when considering the continuum of history. Today, and for the past several decades, first ladies adopt a banner cause, or sometimes several, to support through increased awareness and motivating Oklahoma citizens to action. In the beginning of Oklahoma statehood, though, doing much more than taking care of the governor's family while the governor took care of Oklahoma's business was questioned if not condemned.

Some first ladies were highly visible, some extremely reclusive, others a source of pride, some a source of embarrassment. Oklahoma's first ladies reflect Oklahoma women in general. They are driven, almost always knowing exactly where they are going.

The following is a list of Oklahoma's first ladies and the years they served:

* Oklahoma did not have a first lady from 1911 to 1919: Chickie LeFlore Cruce died before her husband, Lee Cruce, became Governor, and Governor Robert Lee Williams never married.

Many of the inaugural gowns worn by Oklahoma's first ladies are displayed at the Kirkpatrick Center in Oklahoma City. Oklahoma's First Ladies, a book by LuCelia Wise, (Evans Publications, Perkins, Oklahoma, 1983) provides some additional information.

Secretaries of State Since Statehood

The office of the Secretary of State was an elective office from statehood until 1975 when the Oklahoma Constitution was amended and it became an appointive office, running concurrent with the governor and effective January 8, 1979. Passage of State Question 436, on May 3, 1966, made it possible for secretaries of state to succeed themselves.

Corporation Commissioners Since Statehood

The Oklahoma Corporation Commission comprises three commissioners who are elected to six-year terms. The terms are staggered so one commissioner vacancy occurs every two years. This pattern was established by lot after election of the first three commissioners in 1907. In-term vacancies are filled by gubernatorial appointment. Appointed commissioners serve until the next regularly scheduled election.

Thirty-seven different persons have served on the commission, and there have been forty-eight elections and three initial appointments (and other interim appointments) since statehood. All commissioners have been Democrats except Robert H. (Bob) Anthony, E. R. Hughes, J. C. Watts Jr., Ed Apple, Denise Bode, and Jeff Cloud, all Republicans.

Anthony, elected in 1988 and again in 1994 and 2000, was the first Republican commissioner in sixty years. Hughes held the distinction of being the only commissioner to serve two non-successive terms. He was elected in 1920, but lost a 1926 re-election bid. He was elected again in 1928.

The commission panel with longest tenure was the twentieth, when Harold Freeman, Wilburn Cartwright and Ray C. Jones sat together for 13 years (1955–68). No other Commission sat longer than eight years without a membership change. The average tenure for a Commission panel is 3.8 years. Commissioners in order of succession are:

Seat One

Andrew P. Watson (D), elected 1907, 1908, 1914, impeached and removed 1915; W.D. Humphrey (D), appointed 1915, elected 1916, resigned 1919; R.E. Echols (D), appointed 1919; E.R. * In 1995, J.C. Watts Jr. resigned as commissioner after his election to the U.S. Congress, but didn't vacate this office until 1/9/95, the day Governor Keating was sworn in. Departing Governor Walters attempted to appoint Charles Nesbitt to the commission in December 1994 to fill the vacancy left by Watts. Walters contended the position would be vacant 1/4/95, when Congress convened. Walter's appointment of Nesbitt was denied by the Oklahoma Supreme Court, allowing Keating to appoint Ed Apple.

Floterial Districts

Original apportionment of the House of Representatives, as provided by the Constitution, authorized at least one representative for each county. In addition, 14 two-county districts and one tri-county district (known as floterial districts) were created, each of which was to elect one representative. These multi-county districts were superimposed over the single county districts, and were created to provide for population in excess of the minimum specified in the Constitution. This arrangement continued until 1911 when a reapportionment was made on the basis of the 1910 census.

(1) Resigned. Gene Stipe (D) elected at Special Election December 11, 1956 to fill unexpired term.

(2) Resigned. Ed Berrong (D) elected at Special Election November 4, 1958 to fill unexpired term.

(3) Died February 24, 1958. Milam King (D) elected at Special Election November 4, 1958 to fill unexpired term.

(4) John W. Russell Jr. won the Democratic nomination in the 1956 Democratic Runoff Primary Election after recount of absentee ballots. This was challenged in District Court by Tom Payne Jr., and the court ruled invalid all absentee ballots, thus giving the nomination to Payne. The State Supreme Court later ruled that the District Court had no jurisdiction in the election and declared Russell the winner. On November 23, 1956, Governor Raymond Gary declared the office vacant since neither candidate's name appeared on the General Election ballot and ordered a Special Election on December 22, 1956. This was won by Payne over his Republican opponent after Russell refused to be a candidate, maintaining the election was illegal. He contested the Governor's authority for such an election in the Supreme Court. Citing previous rulings, the Supreme Court said the Legislature was the sole judge of its membership and on January 15, 1957, the Senate voted unanimously to seat Payne.

(5) Resigned. Arthur G. McComas (D) elected at Special Election December 11, 1962 to fill unexpired term.

Seminole stickball players (Circa 1900). Stickball is a rough game (similar to modern day Lacrosse), played by not only the Seminole, but many other tribes. Points are scored when a small ball, made of deer hair and hide, strikes a wooden fish or ball on the top of a pole about twenty-eight feet in height. Fewer points are earned when the ball hits the pole..

Justices of the Supreme Court

The Constitution, Article VII, Section 1, established the Supreme Court of Oklahoma. Section 3 divided the state in five districts, creating the positions of five justices in the court and providing that the number could be changed by law.

The Sixth Legislature, R.S. (1917) enacted Senate Bill No. 252 that increased the number of justices from five to nine and redistricted the state into nine Supreme Court Judicial Districts. The act authorized the governor to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one justice from each of the four additional Supreme Court Judicial Districts created. The act further provided for the election of justices at the regular biennial election in 1918. The justices for District Six and Nine were elected for terms of six years, a justice for District Seven was elected for a term of four years and a justice for District Eight was elected for a term of two years, "and thereafter, three of the Justices of the Supreme Court shall be elected at each general biennial election to serve for a term of six years each..."

The Sixteenth Legislature, R.S. (1937) enacted Senate Bill No. 249 which authorized each justice of the Supreme Court to appoint a legal assistant, subject to confirmation by the court. Legal assistants were required to have the qualifications of a district judge. The act further authorized the court to appoint two Supreme Court referees having the qualifications of a district judge and one chief legal executive assistant to the chief justice. The chief legal executive assistant was directed to act as marshal.

At a Special Election, July 11, 1967, constitutional amendments were adopted to provide a complete reorganization of Oklahoma courts. Beginning in 1968, members of the Supreme Court ran on a nonpartisan statewide retention ballot at the general election only. If retained by the voters, they serve a six-year term. If rejected, the vacancy is filled by the governor.

Court of Criminal Appeals History

The highest court in Oklahoma with exclusive appellate jurisdiction in criminal cases was established and named the Criminal Court of Appeals by the First Legislature, R.S. (1907–08) when it enacted House Bill 397. The act provided “If in any case appealed to the Criminal Court of Appeals, in which the construction of the Constitution of this State, or of the United States, or any Act of Congress is brought in question, the said Criminal Court of Appeals shall certify to the Supreme Court of the State, the question involving the construction of the Constitution of this State, or of the United States, or any Act of Congress for final determination of the question so certified.” The act further provided that the judges should be appointed by the governor, by and with the consent and advice of the Senate. The judges appointed were to hold office until January 1, 1911, when the court was to terminate, unless continued by the legislature.

The Second Legislature, R.S. (1909) enacted House Bill 33 which perpetuated the Criminal Court of Appeals. The act repealed all prior laws in conflict and gave the court exclusive appellate jurisdiction. In case of a vacancy in the office of a judge of the court, the governor was authorized to fill the vacancy by appointment for the unexpired term, or until the first succeeding biennial election. The judges of the court who were in office at the time the act took effect were to continue in office until the expiration of their term of office under their appointment, and until their successors were duly elected and qualified. The act further provided for the first election of judges at the General Election in 1910. The state was divided into three Criminal Court of Appeals Judicial Districts, designated respectively as the Eastern, Northern and Southern Criminal Court of Appeals Judicial Districts.

The Twenty-seventh Legislature, R.S. (1959) enacted Senate Bill 36, which changed the name from Criminal Court of Appeals to Court of Criminal Appeals.

At a Special Election, July 11, 1967, constitutional amendments were adopted to provide a complete reorganization of Oklahoma courts. Beginning in 1968 judges of the Court of Criminal Appeals ran on a nonpartisan statewide retention ballot at the General Election only. If retained by the voters, judges serve a six-year term. If rejected, the vacancy is filled by appointment of the governor. In 1987 redistricting created two new positions on the court.

Court of Civil Appeals History

Authorized by Article 7, § 1 of the Oklahoma Constitution, the Oklahoma Legislature first established the Court of Appeals of the State of Oklahoma by adoption of 20 O.S. Supp. 1968 § 30.1 (S.B. 697). In 1970 the legislature amended § 30.1 and added § 30.2 et seq., S.B. 563. As initially established, the court consisted of six judges, one elected from each of the six congressional districts (see 20 O.S. 1971 § 30.9) in nonpartisan elections for a term of six years. Staggered initial terms commencing in 1971 were provided for in § 30.9, giving the judges from the first and second districts two years, judges from the third and fourth districts four years, and judges from the fifth and sixth districts six years.

The court initially consisted of two permanent divisions with one to sit in Tulsa County and one to sit in Oklahoma County (20 O.S. 1971 § 30.2). In 1982, by adopting H.B. 1611, the legislature amended the statutes to add six judges to the court, one from each of the six congressional districts. These additional judges first took office January 1983. For the additional positions, the legislature adopted a staggered initial term plan identical to the plan provided initially under § 30.9. By this same legislation, two additional permanent divisions of the court were established so that two divisions sit in Oklahoma County (Divisions I and III) and two divisions sit in Tulsa County (Divisions II and IV).

In 1987, by adopting S.B. 22, the legislature abolished the nonpartisan election for judges of the court and provided for retention in 20 O.S. 1991 § 30.15–30.18. Under this plan, as with the Oklahoma Supreme Court and the Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals, a retention question is placed on the general election ballot as to each judge at the general election immediately preceding the expiration of that judge's term. Effective November 1, 1996, the legislature changed the name of the court to the "Court of Civil Appeals of the State of Oklahoma," 20 O.S. Supp. 1996 § 30.1 (S.B. 1036).

Oklahoma A&M wrestling coach and athletic director Ed Gallagher amidst photos of his athletes, taken in his office in February 1939, just 18 months before his death. Coaching wrestling from 1916 until 1940, Gallagher is considered instrumental in the evolution of the modern style of the sport—developing over 400 wrestling holds. All together, his Oklahoma A&M wrestling teams went 138–5–4 including 19 undefeated seasons, and 11 NCAA titles. Gallagher remains one of the most successful coaches in NCAA athletics history.
